Tuesday Wrap-up

Michaels Discusses Sequester, Standards, and More

In a wide-ranging, informal discussion at this morning's AIHce General Session, U.S. Assistant Secretary of Labor for OSHA David Michaels shared his views on budget constraints, the regulatory process, and a host of public policy issues in workplace safety and health. The session was conducted in a "Meet the Press"-style format, with former OSHA Administrator John Henshaw, CIH, serving as host and questioner. Read more.

Sinclair Lecture Stresses Importance of Public Records

Reporter Tony Cook of the Indianapolis Star is no stranger to frustrating days on the job. While trying every angle he could think of to speak with workers for a story on occupational exposures to diacetyl and other hazardous chemicals at Sensient Flavors, a food and beverage plant in Indianapolis, Ind., he attempted to flag down motorists on the street and even visited a local bar—this after being asked to leave plant property and not return.
